The world of Flightless is a stylized reality drawn from the real world. The physics and mechanics are authentic, but the world is a bit stylized, filled with floating islands, characters, and objects. Unlike traditional point-and-click adventures, where the user had little to do except click their way through levels, Flightless introduces a unique mechanic that is the core of its gameplay: the ability to manipulate the "floating" world. By using the arrow keys or cursor keys to control the character's movement through the game, the player must maneuver among objects in the world to navigate past them or around them to solve each puzzle. Each level begins with the player jumping onto one of the floating islands of the world. The player can navigate the world by looking around the screen, and can manipulate the environment in real time by moving. Buttons are not present to interact with the world, as instead the player will manipulate objects by running into them or following cues on the screen. The object of the game is to collect gems, which will be used to unlock further areas. Gems are collected by solving puzzles, and they are dropped by objects in the game. Characters The main character of the game is a mysterious, uncategorizable being who can fly. He was never named, but the game hints at his purpose. There is no background story for Flightless. There are no words, no text, no dialogue. There are no choices to make other than what is directly presented to the player. The game's art style pays homage to classic cartoons like those of Tex Avery. Main Menu The main menu is the first screen to appear when starting up the game, and plays a short video before taking the player to the main screen. Main Game A series of puzzles, most of which must be solved by observing the environment and by using the mechanic for manipulating the world, challenge the player. The puzzles involve the collection of gems which are dropped by objects throughout the world. The game has no dialogue, but through hints the player will be led to discover how gems are to be collected. The game ends when the player collects all three of the gems in the game, or when the player decides to quit the game. Adventure An adventure takes place in three zones of the same world. Each contains six main challenges which must be solved to get through a zone. The first zone is the Flawless Zone. If the player has collected

"Hope's Journey: A Therapeutic Experience" is a brain-training game based on evidence-based techniques on Cognitive Behavioral Therapy. This game features unique, innovative mechanics which include "thought catching" and "cognitive biases", mixed with a puzzle format that will entertain and thrill you. Hope's Journey features a unique blend of innovative gameplay and evidence-based techniques to help players learn CBT and recognize common cognitive biases, for a better mental wellbeing.Game mechanics:Cognitive biases are systematic errors of judgment, in certain situations and contexts, that make us fall victim to misconceptions, stereotypes and other cognitive errors. We call these cognitive biases. For example, people tend to overestimate the level of risk associated with a particular event or situation and this is due to a cognitive bias called "anchoring". There are many more cognitive biases, but we'll just focus here on three most common ones: Illusory correlation: This is related to the feeling of being in a group or a crowd, and how people can assume that the majority of people think or feel the same way as they do. For example, women tend to be pregnant longer than men and even though in reality they are exactly the same, we tend to assume that men are less likely to get pregnant than women, which is not necessarily true. Low-effort inference: This is a mistaken conclusion that we come to, when we assume that what we do/think is a natural and/or inevitable reaction to a given situation, rather than a result of our specific actions and/or the context/environment. For example, we tend to think that feeling happy is a natural reaction to good news and we also tend to think that feeling sad is a natural reaction to bad news, when in reality, feeling good or bad is a function of the type of news we're told. Self-serving bias: People tend to draw conclusions or evaluate something based on what they perceive to be in their own best interest, or what they think is best for them. For example, people tend to view situations from the first-person perspective, rather than the third-person one, when it comes to things such as personal decisions. Cognitive biases are one of the most important findings of cognitive psychology. Besides helping us understand behavior, they're also used by cognitive behavioral therapists as techniques to help people change their beliefs and behaviors. Hope's Journey plays with many types of cognitive biases, and we use them to enhance and complement the game experience and help people understand and change

Relivium was a science fiction role-playing video game developed by 8th Level Interactive and published by German company Hobbykeller in 1996. The game's graphic style was heavily influenced by 1980s computer games like Ultima and Dragon Quest, with the setting being reconstructed from texts belonging to writer Douglas Adams and the Wasteland from the defunct computer game Wasteland 2: Director's Cut. Relivium was released on CD-ROM for the IBM PC, and was intended to be ported for Mac OS and DOS computers. Yet, after 8th Level Interactive dissolved into a single employee Jürgen Heckel (who had previously worked for Brøderbund Software producing the computer game Tomcat), the project was cancelled, resulting in the game being published by a German printshop (Bentley Print). A Region 1 DVD of the PC version was released by Liberation in 2007. An updated version of the game, with enhanced visuals, running under Windows 98/2000/XP, was released for Microsoft Windows and Mac OS in March 2009. Gameplay Relivium is an early real-time strategy game, the actions in the game are between 5 minutes and 60 minutes. The game requires the player to manage the progress through the game and prepare necessary resources (such as reagent or money), leading up to the end, which includes an intense combat system using different types of weapons. A main objective is to develop the player's character. In the main game, the player chooses the "Class" of a human and character attributes (Strength, Agility, Charisma and Intelligence) at the beginning of the game. Physical features of the character (Frame and Contract) are also chosen at this time. Before this the player is given a short tutorial on how to use the inventory and character advancement. At the end of the main game, the player receives a quest in the form of a letter written by Douglas Adams (author of The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy) that explains what the title character of the game must do; for example, the Zeta Minor's mission is to find the way to Queen Olmeca. In the case of Sol's mission, he is tasked to find the Silver Leg. The main game is divided into six regions (the past, the present, the future, the alternate universe, an unnamed world, and an ancient planet), in which they may have the resources necessary to advance the game. Once a character reaches the end of the main game,
