Is there a way to change code in GitHub, and commit it during an update from CI 2.1.0 to CI 3.0.4? A: Sure, you can commit your new code/changes to GitHub, however this is not as simple as writing your modified code into a text file, and committing that. The first thing you need to do is check out your (or even multiple) branches: $ git checkout dev/master Note this can change depending on what you've checked out as the default branch, see the below image of GitHub's default branches: Then, you need to commit your code: $ git commit Now, you just need to push them to GitHub. The first step is a pull request, see this tutorial A: First things first: Checkout your development branch (in my case branch.master) into your local repository git checkout branch.master Build your changes into the production branch (in my case, www). git checkout production You can build changes into production. Run the deployment scripts git checkout production # Run the deployment scripts This is my good practice. You can put this step into a CI build, if you want. In general, it's a good idea to use a branch for the production.master and your development. You can find more information about it on Github Commit your changes git commit -a Push all the changes to production git push production Alternatively I also suggest 0cc13bf012
